SEATTLE BUSINESS RELOCATES TO EAST LANSING ENLIVEN SOFTWARE CONTRIBUTES NEW JOBS AND HIGHLY SKILLED EMPLOYEES TO GREATER LANSING AREA

EAST LANSING, MI – 03/01/07 One of the latest bright spots in Mid-Michigan's economic news is the relocation of Seattle-based Fidesic Software to East Lansing. Fidesic, in business since 2000, will be rebranded as Enliven Software effective immediately.

In progress now, the relocation is expected to create approximately 30 new jobs in greater Lansing area over the next two years. Enliven Software, which features the Fidesic suite of products, has retained one of the original members of the Fidesic development team, including David Haner to move to the Lansing area. Several other members are considering the relocation also.

Prior to joining Enliven, Haner worked as a part of the team on the development of Microsoft's TransPoint internet bill payment and presentment service, which recently sold for over $1 billion to online banking service provider CheckFree. Haner has vast Microsoft programming experience, lead a development team for a bank in Seattle, and ran his own independent consulting firm.

In addition to their work at Microsoft, the original development team brings extensive online payment experience from Bank of America and First Data. Contrary to popular thinking, and in light of the fertile technical scene in Seattle, it is possible to lure West Coasters to the Heartland. Mid-Michigan's low cost of living, strong healthcare and education, and solid family environment were enough to lure several of these highly skilled employees to the new East Lansing headquarters.

"We hear so much about losing people to Microsoft or other regions in the country, and this proves that we can also get them back," says Enliven CEO Bunmi Akinyemiju. "We're reaching out of the state and bringing business back here. In addition to recycling Michigan dollars back into our own economy, we want to add outside to the revenue stream. Enliven's market is global, so we will be bringing in monies from outside the city, state, region, and country in addition to attracting talent from everywhere. "

In addition to part of the development team, Enliven Software plans to move its 15-server data center, which powers the Fidesic platform to the Michigan based server farm. The move is expected to be complete within the year.
